

How NHMRC will Address these Health Issues

The issues listed above are broad and dealing with them successfully will involve cooperation and effort from all sectors of the Australian community, including governments, the private sector, research sector, non-government organisations including professional colleges, and the community.

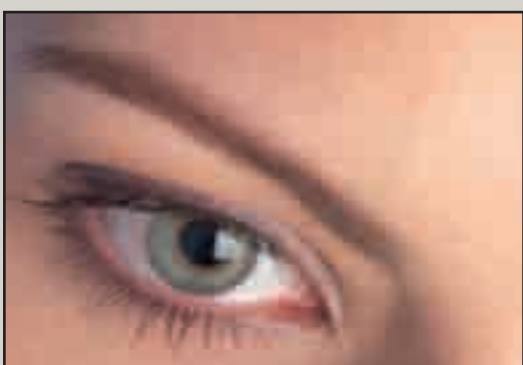

Having identified these major issues, NHMRC will target through its research, ethics, regulatory and advisory functions where it can add most value to the country in meeting these challenges. NHMRC will seek to work and make partnerships with relevant organisations as required.

To help Australia meet tomorrow's health challenges, NHMRC will give priority to addressing the challenges identified in the preceding section.

NHMRC will not be limited to these identified issues and will continue to monitor and address major issues as they arise.

NHMRC will develop a detailed business plan, outlining the role of the Council, Committees and staff, to address issues outlined above and NHMRC's strategic objectives outlined in the Strategic Plan below.

BALANCE
BALANCE
Supporting all forms of research including molecular, cellular, and clinical research targeted at individual health.